'A Great Lack of a Preparatory Classic School in that Section.

MILES'S DEATH A HEAVY LOSS

Some Talk of Re-establishing the School at St. Albans.

(Special from a Staff Correspondent.)
RADFORD, MONTGOMERY COUNTY VA., July 19 .- The educational facilities or rather, the lack of them, in the southwest are becoming a subject of serious thought among the popule of this sec-There are public schools in number and standard about the emals of those of other sections of Virginia.

There is not a classical preparatory school for boys with boarding department in all the country between Roanoke and the Tennesse line, a distance of nearly 150 miles. Nor is there an in-stitution of this character in the country lying between Roanoke and the West Virginia line at Bluefield, over a hundred

These facts were brought out in the course of a conversation with a gentleman of itadford to-day. They were suggested by mention of St. Albans School just across the river from Radford. The red brick and white columns and porches of the school building, which sits on a grassy plateau overlooking the New River, present an imposing appearance, viewed from the Radford side. The school was closed last fall, and there is no prospect of its being reopence.

A Heavy Loss. A Heavy Loss.

The fact that efforts to start school on a new career of honor usefulness have falled, has aroused school on a new career of honor and usefulness have falled, has aroused the people of this and contiguous sections to a realization that Southwest Virginia suffered a tremendous loss when Col. George W. Miles died, and the school, which he had made to take almost the very first place among the preparatory institutions of the country, ended its eareer, also.

To be accurate, St. Allams was closed at the beginning of the last school year, while the founder died in the following February, Col. Miles had leased the school to an educator who conducted it one session. He was a man of culture and a fine teacher, but he did not succeed in keeping it at the high mark of prosperity reached by his predecessor. When the time arrived for the opening of the school light year such a small number of students presented themselves the principal decided to close the institution and surrender his lease. And St. Albans, a school which in a comparatively few years had attained a reputation hardly second to any, passed into history.

St. Albans.

St, Albans.

Whether the school will be reopened is a question. That the people of the southwest are being aroused to the need of a preparatory institution for their boys is a good sign. Efforts have already been made, which had they been successful, would have resulted in St. Albans again becoming one of the country's good preparatory schools.

An effort to Induce a large university to purchase the buildings and grounds, embracing 65 acres of beautiful rolling blue grass land, has not yet eventuated. The proposition is being investigated, with a chance that it will be adopted. Another proposition has been made from a certain quarter to loan to the right man sufficient money to purchase the property, upon his agreeing to reopen the school. This has not yet been accepted. A plan to organize a joint stock company, which shall purchase the property, which shall purchase the properties teacher, is also being considered. Out of these various plans, one should prove successful. St. Albans was founded by the late Col. Miles about ten years ago. He made the standard high, and he gave his pupilis the best possible training. The school was a success from the first. The usual number of pupils was about 60, and the marticulates represented all or nearly all the Southern States. Boys from the west and the north, were beginning to come to St. Albans when Col. Miles retired from the position of head-master. Students who finished the St. Albans course, invariably took an advanced stand in the colleges and universities at which they matriculated. It was not alone in the field of scholarships that St. Albans accelled. There was scarcely a school of a preparatory character in the country which put better teams on the football and baseball fields.

'Larger Fields.

Larger Fields.

Larger Fields.

Larger Fields.

But Col. Miles became interested in various large enterprises. The successful conduct of these required the greater portion of his time and he had to give up the school he had built so well, its closing was a severe blow to preparatory education in Airginia and the South, But upon Southwest Virginia the blow fell with especial severity. The lack of a school of this character is being most severely felt. Incidentally, the closing of St. Albans was a blow to the city of Radford.

A gentleman who has large interests in the southwest expresses the opinion that if the matter is, presented properly to the men of wealth who live and have their capital invested in the great coal fields of this ection of Virginia, they will hasten to come to the relief of St. Albans. A worthy sentimental interest attaches to the subject of reopening the school, but deeper still must be the desira to see in Southwest Virginia one institution where the boys may be prepared to enter colleges. A certain genticmen of this section told me he had within his gift scholarships in a university and two colleges in Virginia. He had not bestowed any of them, for the soud and sufficient reason that he had not found a young man who was fitted to enter college. In that fact is found a conclusive reason for the reestablishment of St. Albans.

IVANHOE, WYTHE COUNTY, VA.,
Inly 19.—The quarterly conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was held here on Sunday the 15th. Besides the regular business of the church, it was decided to build a new church here, to cost about $3,000. On Monday morning, while the ministers, the church leaders and the business men of the lown were holding a meeting in the Bank of Ivanhoe Building, to decide on a location, a peor laborer, who was also a cripple, passed with the corpse of his chief (who had died Sunday night). He was accompanied by his wife and another child in a wagon, that he had borrowed for the purpose, went on to a grave yard near town, where the father was compelled to fill the grave himself, as there was pe on cise to do'so.

When the Brownies again took charge of the bat, they scored two more runs, which made the seere 4 to 9 in their favor. They kept it that way to the hist inning, when Knightley made a wild throw to second base and Jones, for the Norfolks, scored a run, which was the only one made for the Norfolks.

Crawford, pitcher for the Brownies, put up a very hard game for the Collegians; also Atkinson made it very hard for the Hortonies, and but for the lack of support in the outer field, probably the Norfolks would have been shirt, out. McEvoy, who played third base for the Brownies, made a high jump and stopped the ball just as it bounced from the ground; also Gruner, first base, played his base botter than any day they have played here.

Shafer, center field for the Collegians, made a long run and caught one of the Brownies files, White, first base, or Norfolk, played his base better than your made and missed the ball.
